Mr. Bell carried Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia by a few hundred votes in each. The whole vote cast in 1860 was 4,680,193, and Lincoln's majority over Douglas, 491,295, over Breckinridge, 1,018,490, and over Bell, 1,275,821.

IT is asserted by Vanity Fair that Mr. Delane is about to resign his post as editor of the London Times. He will be succeeded by Mr. Courtney, at present a member of the staff of that paper, and who was senior wrangler of his year at Cambridge. It is said that Mr. Delane's resignation is due to the constant disagreements which have taken place between him and the proprietors since the Sampson affair.

"Of course. But it is not so much Alen I care about as the financial attitude of the Democracy there. I believe I can make reasonable, reasoning people see that the position of the party is sound, and not inconsistent with correct principles of political economy,' I said that I was surprised to bear this from a man who had been a free trader in the senate of the United States, and always a severely logical political economist. Governor Brown remarked: "My position is perfectly clear to my own mind, though I may not be able to formulate it in conversation. It is this: I hold that the effort to bring about specie resumption through contraction is a fallacy. That while I do not distinctly call for inflation, I challenge the administration party to the proof that to contract the currency is to hasten the day of resumption." There seemed to be some casuistry or novelty in this position, and Governor Brown, in his cool, semi indifferent, yet forensic way, proceeded: "I am not oblivious of the advantages of having a uniform currency with the world, yet I believe that the creation of a national debt of two billion five hundred million dollars, all bonded, and in reality a form of currency, has altered our relations with the exterior world. The state of things here is phenomenal. The ery of the country for avocation, for usiness, is the necessity of the hour, and the year, and perhaps the years; for things grow no better. So you ob serve that ten years after the war gold is at one hundred and seventeen If the government will give credit power of the United States will be exerted in favor of the greenback. The way to specie payment, I affirm, is not by contraction. It may not be by inflation; but it is by the appreciation of the greenback instead of its degradation I explained to Governor Brown that I was still befogged to know how contraction was not the way to specie payment. He said: "Contract? Contract what? You don't contract the bonds themselves, which are bankable, exchangeable, indeed currency. These bonds now supply the place of cotton to give us commercial credit in Europe. The banks will The proposed constitutional conven- take them to meet your note. There are more than two thousand millions of them. You don't contract that currengin of bank-notes which we non-bondholders use, and which is necessary for our daily industry. You let the national bank use all the bonds it wants, but you cut the shopkeeper's currency down. And I do believe that the growing power of the bond over the greenback is a source of irregularity and of hard times. Here are all the engines of work-a living people, good crops, transportation, ablic credit-and still the wheels of raffic are almost stopped. The Ohio campaign is available to present this lic policy is a failure, and the government, enjoying a credit possessed by no Mobile Register: When the present nation in the world, beholds its onstitution of the State was up for people out of employment, and Of the name of the country is solvent, while ness people of the whole country are scratching hard to pay interest, and are glad if they can do it. Now, the Democratic party in Ohio is not obliged in the pending campaign to take the initiative. Let it put the administration party on the defensive."

I again expressed to Governor Brown my surprise to find the greenback fever absorbing even himself. He said: "I believe in looking around us to take a policy. These hard times, with an lies in an unaccommodating policy of has been reorganized at Charleston with | the government toward the people.
